

Lone Pine, Whitman County, Washington

Settlers arrived from the east by way of the Oregon Trail seeking good farmland and they found it in the northeastern part of what is now Whitman County in Washington State. Soon there was a stagecoach serving the area's transportation needs and a stage stop located near a lone pine tree on a rolling Palouse hill. The stage stop became a town and began to grow until the railroads arrived and needed the land. Soon the town was gone leaving only the town's Lone Pine Cemetery. It is now a cemetery without a town and has been almost forgotten.

Friends and descendants have not forgotten!
